You can scan a document quickly and efficiently. Keymacro is a tool that you can use to assist you in this task.In high performance digital systems, multiplexers are used to coordinate the flow of data within a system. A single system typically requires a large number of multiplexers to be used to efficiently route signals between different parts of the system. Each of the multiplexers has a number of select inputs that allow a particular input to be selected from the set of inputs to the multiplexer. For example, if a single multiplexer has sixteen inputs, it can be switched to route data between eight inputs to a register and eight other inputs to a flip-flop. Typically, a multiplexer's select inputs are programmed by way of a mask, which is a pattern of zeros and ones that identify which select inputs will be enabled. For example, to route data between register B and flip-flop C, one mask must be programmed that has bits set to 1, which represents the select inputs for the multiplexer, and bits set to 0, which represent the select inputs for register B and flip-flop C. Usually, multiplexers are programmed using one of two types of masks. The first mask type is a 1-to-1 mask. In this type of mask, each select input of the multiplexer has a corresponding bit that is set to 1. To program the select inputs for a multiplexer, the multiplexer's bit is set to 1, which corresponds to the bit being set to 1 in the 1-to-1 mask. The multiplexer then selects the desired input(s) by way of its select inputs. To program a multiplexer having select inputs that are not equal in number to the select inputs of the multiplexer, the second type of mask is used. This type of mask is referred to as a 2-to-1 mask. In a 2-to-1 mask, bits for select inputs for the multiplexer are set to 0, and bits for a select input of the multiplexer are set to 1. With a 2-to-1 mask, the multiplexer selects the desired input(s) by way of the select inputs for the multiplexer. In systems that have multiple select inputs for a multiplexer, a 1-to-1 mask is typically used because the setup time for the 1-to-1 mask is shorter than that of the 2 2edc1e01e8
