Fujifilm FinePix Z-10 The Fujifilm FinePix Z-10 is a digital camera with a 2.0-megapixel CCD. It was announced October 31, 2005. The device comes with the standard kit lens that is adjustable to five apertures (1, 2, 2.8, 4, and 5.6). However, it is available in an additional bundle with the Fujinon lens EF-S 10.2-27.5mm f/3.5-5.6 (Sigma). It has a lens release mode button, allowing for photographs to be taken with the lens extended or retracted. The Z-10 is considered by some users and reviewers as an entry-level, basic camera. It features a 2.0-megapixel CCD sensor (as opposed to a 1.3-megapixel CCD in the Z-series). The photos are produced using Fujifilm's X-TRAN 2 film simulation technology. The device has Fujifilm's most basic user interface. The Z-10 is slightly heavier than average and has a more 'bulky' feel compared to other 10-megapixel devices. The device can be purchased with or without the Fujinon lens. Photos taken with the lens attached can be stored on a separate memory card that was not purchased with the camera. The device offers only two memory card slots. The default image file size is 864x576, whereas that of a comparable 10.2-megapixel device is 960x600. X-TRAN 2 In 2007, Fujifilm announced X-TRAN 2, which digitally produces 8- and 12-megapixel photos using a 2.7-megapixel CCD sensor. The process is considered a more high-quality alternative to a 2.0-megapixel CCD. X-TRAN 2 allows users to produce ultra-high resolution, high-quality shots using a 10-megapixel sensor, at the same time as more humble-quality photos. 04aeff104c
