Fractures of the cement mantle of bone are often propagated via apatite crystals of the growing cementum (tooth cementum). In vivo, the cementum is covered by a periodontal membrane. The purpose of this study was to evaluate in vitro the importance of the surface charge of apatite crystals in determining the ability of apatite crystals to initiate fracture propagation. Apatite crystals in a very acidic environment (pH 1.2) had a negative charge (anionic), whereas those in a neutral environment (pH 7.4) had a positive charge (cationic). Apatite crystals were incubated in two different simulated body fluids (SBFs), namely SBF-1 (pH 7.4) and SBF-2 (pH 4.5). The electrical potentials on their surfaces were measured by a microelectrode. The groups were divided into two subgroups: one group was subjected to mechanical force and the other to thermal stress. The first subgroup was loaded at 1.0 MPa for 1,000 cycles, and the second at 50 cycles. Spherical apatite crystals embedded in a hydroxyapatite matrix were used for the in vitro study. Apatite crystals were manipulated in a model which included an electrode, a dialysis unit, a rack for SBF, and a tub for insertion into the microelectrode. Positive or negative charges were shown to be differentially associated with the incidence of fracture propagation. Fracture propagation was induced in apatite crystals immersed in SBF-1 (pH 7.4) under 1.0 MPa and cyclic load, and in apatite crystals immersed in SBF-2 (pH 4.5) under 50 cycles of a load.Q: Any tools or softwares to make a web site slider? I'm looking for a tool or softwares to make a web site slider, I saw a lot of sites I want to make it into. All that I need are two image, and it
