With the tools there, it is easier to correct exposure problems, remove blemishes, remove unwanted features, and so on. There are four tools that will help you retouch your photos. These are WiseStamp, Smart Fix, Photoshop Fixer and Advanced Sharpening. The background tracking feature is actually a misnomer. It's OK if you want to track a preset object in the photo. But it's hard to set up, and there are more sophisticated tools available to easily and accurately track and remove unwanted parts of an image. Advertisers most often want to have their logo (or other instant or static element) in an area of the image that exactly matches its file size, and that's not really possible. You can use one of the "track" tools that help you instead. A better choice in this category is the Photoshop SnagIt lab, which is available for the Mac as well.
